OPEN LINES

Aud: "If there's no such thing as Time Travel because that totally, completely interferes with Free Will and choice, and whatever else from that point ... particular point of view ..."

AB: "Well, how the hell ... how the heck do you know that you have Free Will?"

Aud: "Ahh ..."

AB: "You think ... you think you're making choices."

Aud: "Okay, I'm ... okay, I'm a self-aware automaton?"

AB: "There's ... there's no way you can prove it."

Aud: "That I'm a self-aware automaton?"

AB: "There's no way you can prove that you have Free Will."

Aud: "Well, I can prove that if I go back in Time, I can ... I can, ah, manipulate other people's Free Will."

AB: "You're on ... you're on ..."

Aud: "Ah ..."

AB: "... you are on the air with me right now.

How do you know that was not absolutely destined?

How do you know you of Free Will made the choice to call me?"

Aud: "How do I know that?"

AB: "Yes, sir."

Aud: "O-kay. Well, I'm ... I'm gonna bow out ... bow out gracefully on this one."

AB: "All right. Well, you consider that and get back to me."

Aud: "Thanks, Art. Have a great night!"

AB: "Take care."

AB: "As you know I am fascinated beyond belief with Time Travel. I believe Time Travel is possible.

And I believe that based on, um, guests that I've had that are obviously of very high credibility rating like, ah, Michio Kaku, um, the theoretical professor of physics [Professor of Theoretical Physics]. One of the best in the country and, ah, he certainly thinks it's going to be possible ... gonna take a lot of power though, he says.

AB: "I think it's inevitable that Time Travel will be invented."

Michael C. Luckman New Face on Mars

AB: "I am so ... I wonder why I am so fascinated with Time Travel?

I just don't know ... I really am. It's an endless fascination for me.

And I would love to give it a try.

Wouldn't you?

Have you ever wondered, ah, if you had the option, for example, of leaving the present time you're in and going to any time you would like in the past or in the future – just one little catch – because there always is a catch to things, you know? ... YOU COULDN'T COME BACK (!) (Art laughs).

What would you do?

Would you go forward in Time and where would you go?

To when would you go?

Would you go back in Time?

I think the majority choice would probably be to go back in Time, because of course, going ahead is the Unknown – you have no idea. There'd be a few adventuresome people who would do that. My guess is they'd probably be disappointed. I mean, consider what's happening to Rock Music right now?

Jump ahead a hundred (100) or two hundred (200), or five hundred (500) years and your disappointment would know no ends.

Ah, go back on the other hand and you kinda could pick the Era ... the Era you wanted."

with Art

AB: "... [W]e don't really know that time travel is real. I just strongly suspect that it is. Very strongly!"
